MUSIC REVIEW: SINGING HOOSIERS AND CALLIOPE'S CALL

Mission fulfilled for 1 group in 66th 'Spring Concert' and newcomer in its 2nd

By Peter Jacobi

H-T Reviewer

For the Singing Hoosiers, Saturday's "Spring Concert" was the 66th. For Calliope's Call, Friday night's purveyors of art songs, it was just the second.

The 66th was sung twice in the Indiana University Auditorium, afternoon and evening; it was large-scaled, heavily amplified for emphasis, and obvious fun, considering the cheers exhibited throughout. Friday's art song concert, in the Unitarian Universalist Church of Bloomington, was intimate in feel and tone and resulted in an end ovation of approval, increased recognition and sincerity.

Both events merited their response.

Singing Hoosiers

Now trained and guided by director Ly Wilder and associate director Duane Davis, the entertainment offered by IU's highly regarded show choir has taken its stylistic cues from Stephen Zegree, the group's director from 2012 to 2015, when, so sadly and for many so suddenly, he passed away. Wilder and Davis have filled the void, continuing Zegree's efforts to update the repertoire. There's now more pop and zing in the content. Consequently, student attendance appears to be up, as is the number of families with children in the crowd.

The show included 24 numbers that ranged from the opener, Karl King's university anthem "Indiana, Our Indiana," through items taken from the Great American Songbook by Hoagy Carmichael, Harold Arlen, Cole Porter and Irving Berlin, and to the more recent favorites that appeal to younger members of the audience. The arrangements chosen helped to give the aesthetics of the program a more contemporary quality, a brassier sound. To go along with the vocals, the choreography gained in ferocity of movements for both the Varsity members, those up front, and for those on the risers. In other words, the concert has taken on an altered aura. It is now a different show. Traditions remain, but they've been bent more than a bit.

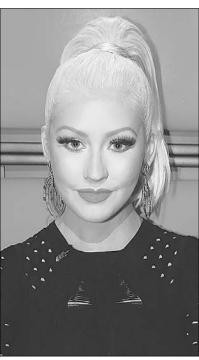

The choir still can sing softly, as it did here and there, such as for the traditional "Shenandoah" and Hoagy's "Georgia." It can sing eloquently the always-included "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and Ly Wilder's impres-sively stirring arrangement of "I Believe." It can do justice to Ward Swingle's clever vocal arrangement of Rimsky Korsakov's "Flight of the Bumblebee," the only item taken from the realm of classical music; one or two more would have been welcome and appropriate, what with the choir, on tour, being ambassadors for IU's Jacobs School of Music, where training in the classics is so central.

But when you can hear "America" and Hoagy's "Up a Lazy River" and Porter's "From This Moment On" and Berlin's "Steppin' Out with My Baby," there's plenty to enjoy. And there was.

A new tradition for the Sing is to allow the Singing Hoosiers and the Hoosiers Band to come up with thematic packages of their own choosing that consist of songs: before intermission, the theme was "Magic," and before the end, it was "Money." For each, the performers chose an encyclopedic number of songs, most of them of very recent vintage. The number might have been cut for greater effectiveness, but the audience surely cheered the choices.

Calliope's Call

The art song recital, "Spirit Song, Voices of Now and Hereafter," featured two fine singers (mezzo soprano and founder of the group Megan Roth and soprano Evelyn Nelson) and one equally fine pianist (Javier Arrebola).

Their aim was to prove art songs as a musical form not only of the past but for the present. Listening to an array of songs, dating from Mozart and Robert Schumann to the midst of the 20th century, one was surprised to hear pieces not heard before, such as "Eight Epitaphs," written in mid-20th century by the American composer Theodore Chanler, and interesting songs tied to Walter de la Mare's imaginary gravestone inscriptions, such as "Three Sisters," "A Midget," "No Voice To Scold" and "Be Very Quiet Now." Roth sang them with emotional fervor.

A gorgeous song by Anton Rubinstein, "Der Engel" ("The Angel"), brought both of the singers to the front at the program's start. Not well known, it proved a delightful, beautifully melodic song well worth placing on recital lists. The team of Roth and Nelson brought ardor to their performance and, as throughout, pianist Arrebola added persuasive completion to the whole.

Richard Strauss's "Allerseelen," Schumann's "Waldesgesprach" ("Forest Conversation"), Reynaldo Hahn's "L'heure exquise" ("The Exquisite Hour") and Mendelssohn's "Sonntagsmorgen" ("Sunday Morning") were among the other highlights. The total package was a winning concoction of 13 individual songs and Chanler's cycle. It was a lovely combine of music treated with helpful wall projections. One wishes, however, that the spoken introductions had been more clearly enunciated; the microphone was not always effectively employed.
